* Fellow of the International Academy for the Study of Tourism

About the editors

Douglas Pearce is Professor of Tourism Management at Victoria University of Wellington in New Zealand. He has published widely on various aspects of tourism including development and planning, tourism organizations, the geography of tourism and urban tourism. Most recently his work has had a New Zealand focus, notably as leader of a major project on tourism distribution channels. Other research interests and consultancy work have taken him to Europe, the South Pacific and Southeast Asia. He is a charter fellow and former vice-president of the International Academy for the Study of Tourism and serves on the editorial boards of a number of journals. With Richard Butler he has co-edited three earlier volumes of the Academy's work: Tourism Research: Critiques and Challenges (1993); Change in Tourism: People, Places, Processes (1995); and Contemporary Issues in Tourism Development (1999).

Richard Butler is Emeritus Professor at Strathclyde University in Glasgow, Scotland, having also taught at the University of Surrey and the University of Western Ontario. His research interests have been primarily in destination development processes and impacts, sustainability of tourism, particularly in islands and remote areas, and the relationship between tourism and indigenous peoples. His most recent publications include books on the role of key individuals in the development of tourism, political change and tourism, and sustainability of tourism in small islands. His primary research areas have been Canada and Scotland, but he has taught and conducted research in Australia, South East Asia, and Europe also. He is a charter fellow of the International Academy for the Study of Tourism, and served as its first Secretary and then two terms as President.
